The Barre Regional Vocational-Technical Center begins to take shape as the steel framework appears.

The architect's drawing shows the final design of the new wing.

The Vocational-Technical Center Opens

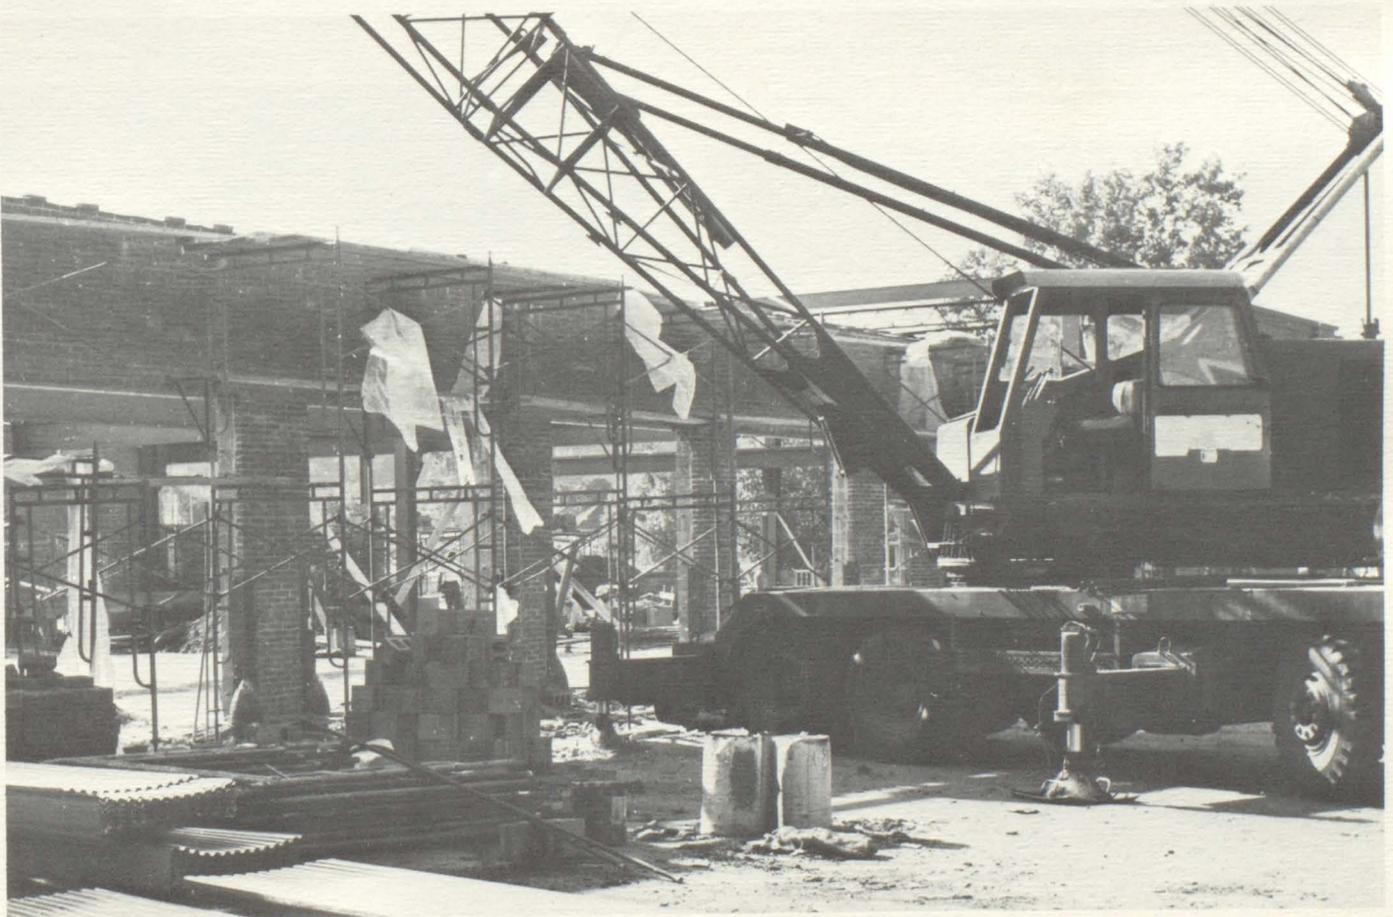

This year the doors of the million-dollar Regional Vocational-Technical Center swung open for students. In the fall we were excited by our first look at the addition to the existing Spaulding High School. This entire wing was constructed with state and federal funds at no direct cost to the city of Barre.

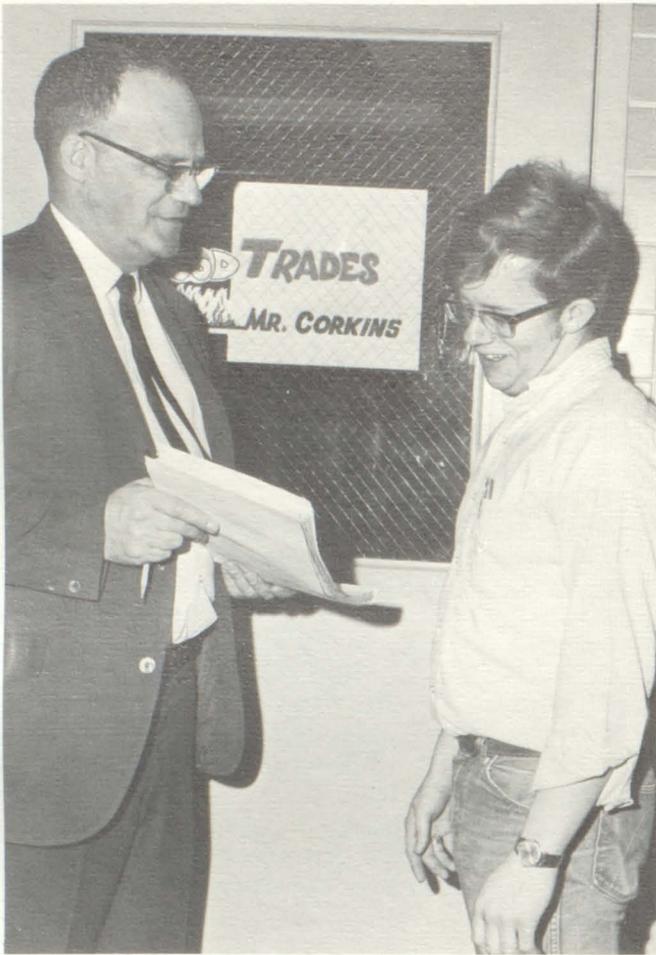

When adults visited the new building during a special open house, we heard comments like, "Now we know what a really comprehensive school looks like," and "There's no better place to spend a million dollars than on a school like this."

Visitors could readily see where a million dollars was spent — rows and rows of technical equipment in the electronics department, printing presses and similar equipment in the printing and graphics division, plumbing and heating equipment, along with sheet metal training equipment in the building trades division, professional hotel and restaurant equipment in the food trades laboratory, the extensive health occupations center, the highly mechanized automotive mechanics shop, and of course, the miniature stone shed.

We are proud of the several firsts in the Vocational-Technical Center — the stone trades course is the first one of its kind in the entire United States, while the diversified occupations program is the first in Vermont. And we must mention the first school store at Spaulding, operated by students in the distributive education program.

Brick by brick the new Vocational-Technical Center becomes a reality.

STONE TRADES

Stone Trades at the Vocational Technical Center is the first course of its kind in the United States.

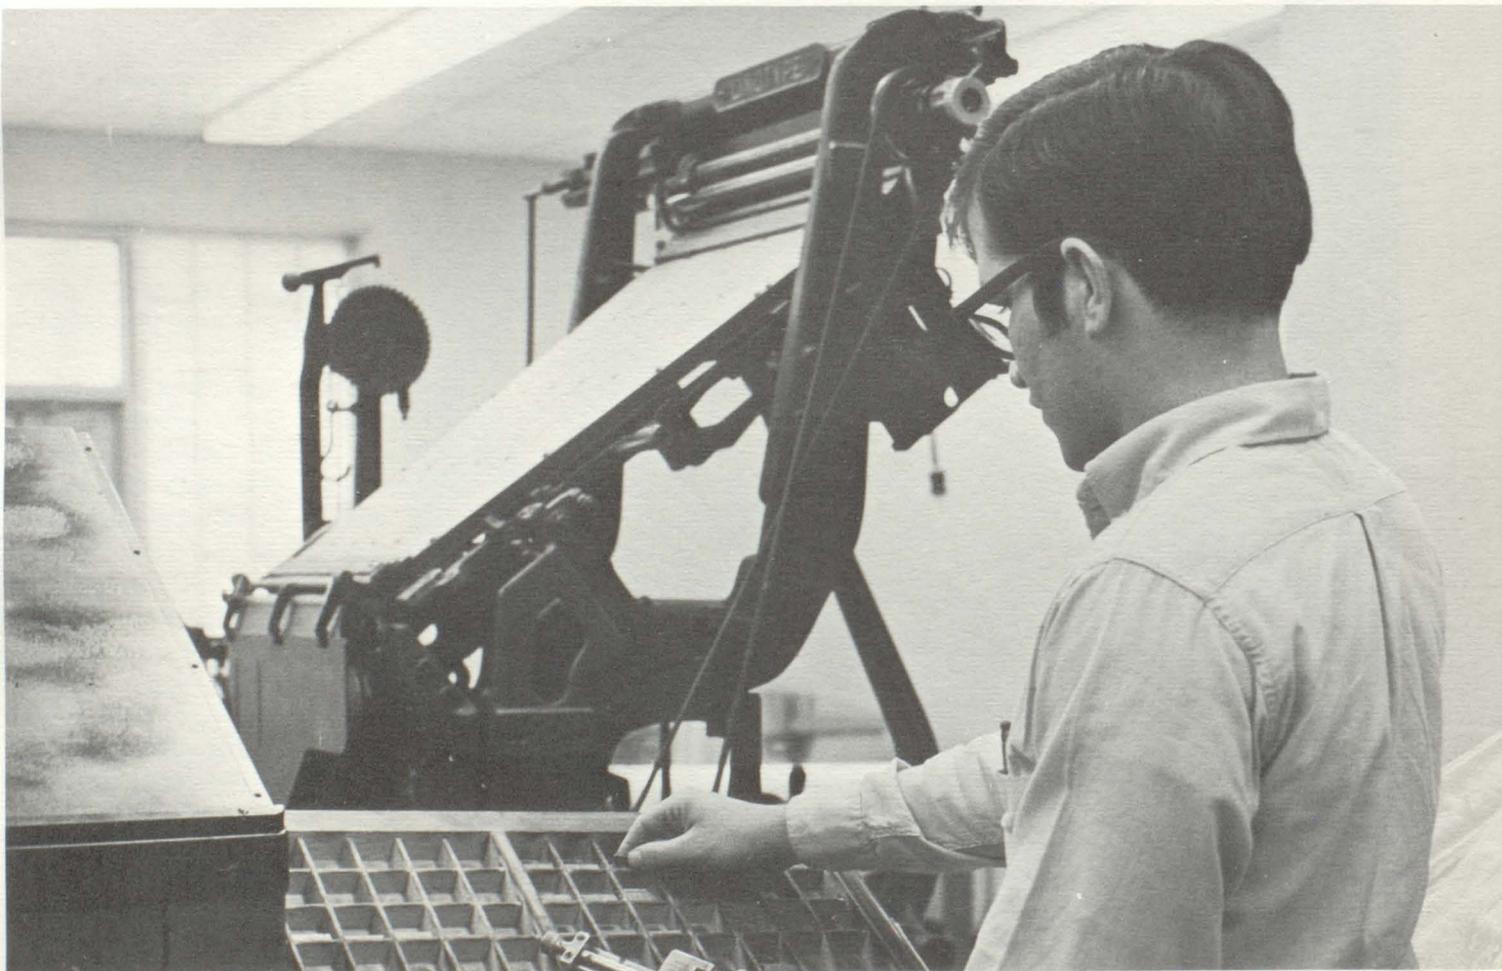

Open to Juniors and Seniors, the course offers experience in the following areas: monumental granite cutting, the use of machinery such as pneumatic tool, surface machine, wire saw, contour grinder, carbo saw, operating the derrick, lumping (chaining granite) and sandblasting. Also related subjects included estimating of stone, lettering, trade science, trade mathematics, and freehand drawing.

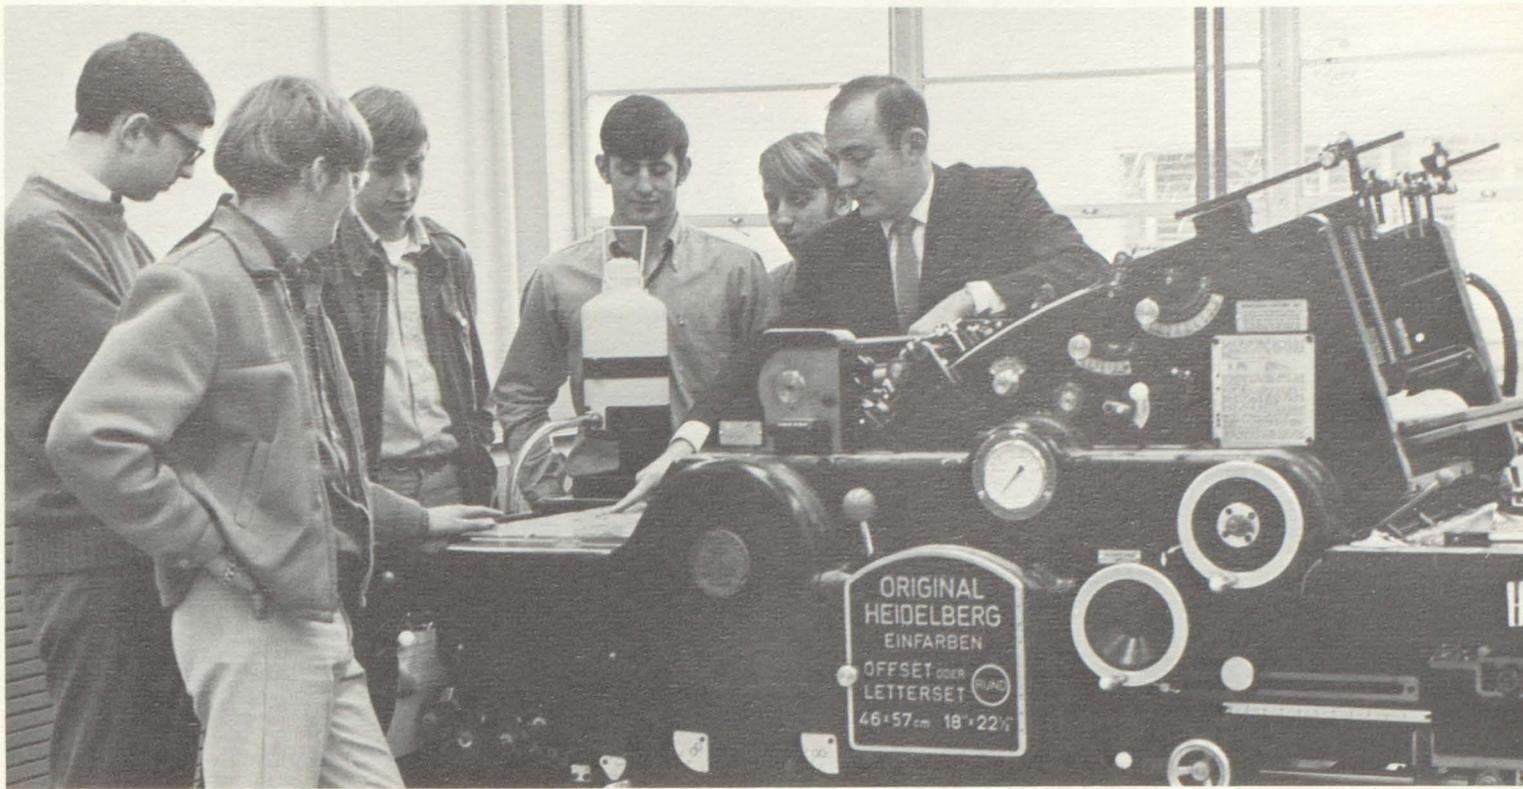

Thus with the broad view of the granite industry that the students will receive, they may choose the area they wish to specialize in, whether in manufacturing, sales or dealership.

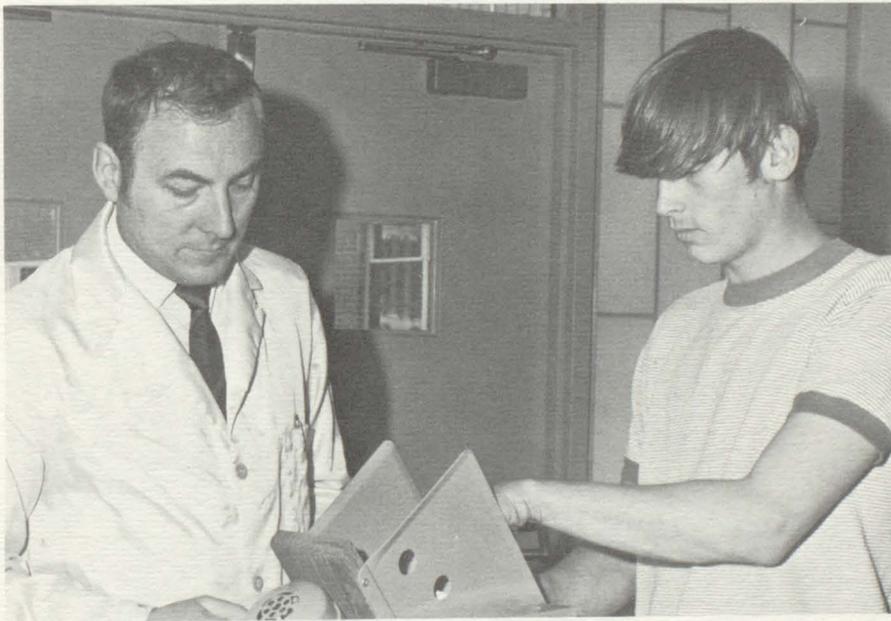

ROBERT FREEMAN
Printing and Graphic Arts

Above Mr. Freeman assists a student on the linotype machine. Here we see a student hand setting type from a Ludlow case.

Students watch a letterpress cylinder press.

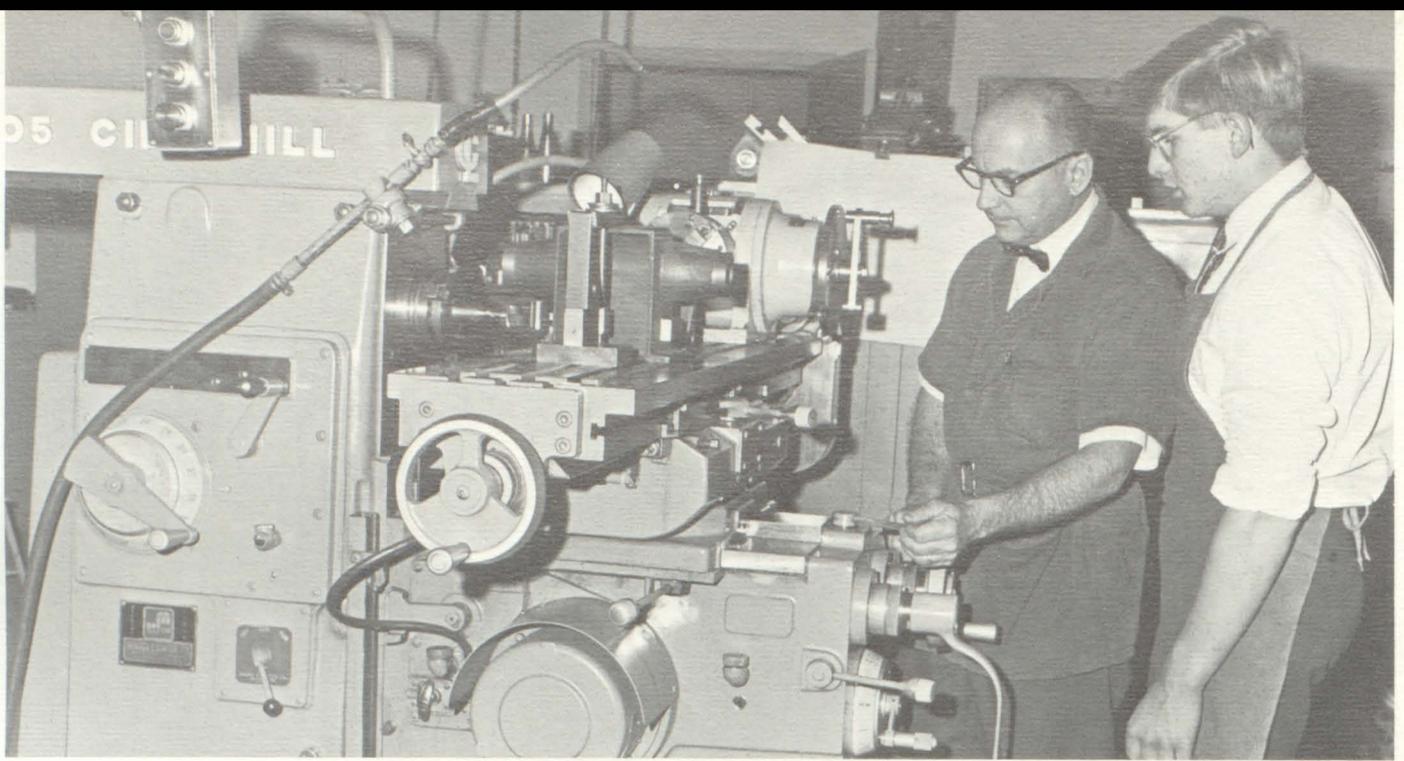

Mr. Freeman show a student how to stack pages before binding.

PRINTING GRAPHICS

The student enrolled in printing graphics, learns to perform the basic operations of type setting and presswork, layout and design, methods used in printing books, magazines, and newspapers, in addition to the operation of the various machines used in the printing industry.

Printing craftsmen specialize in one area: type composition, photography, platemaking, presswork, or binding. Courses in printing are available to high school students in the junior-senior years.

Dennis Dessereau, Roy Gale, Douglas Barberi.

MACHINE TRADES

Machine Shop practice represents the largest single group of skilled jobs in manufacturing.

The Machinist is the key to all trades. His mark is on every phase of industry. He translates the ideas of the designer and inventor into practical and efficient machinery.

The machinist fabricates, repairs, or makes parts for all pieces of equipment used by modern manufacturing plants. He uses all types of precision instruments.

Courses in Machine Shop Practices are available for in-school youth; out-of-school youth; adults; employed, unemployed, and underemployed youths and adults; and veterans. The Machine Shop Practice courses include training in such areas as Bench Work, Lathe Work, Drill Press Work, Milling, Shaping, Planing, Grinding, General Maintenance and Repair, and Heat Treating. Related subjects include Blueprint Reading, Machine Trades Mathematics, Machine Shop Science and Metallurgy, Personal Employment and Safety.

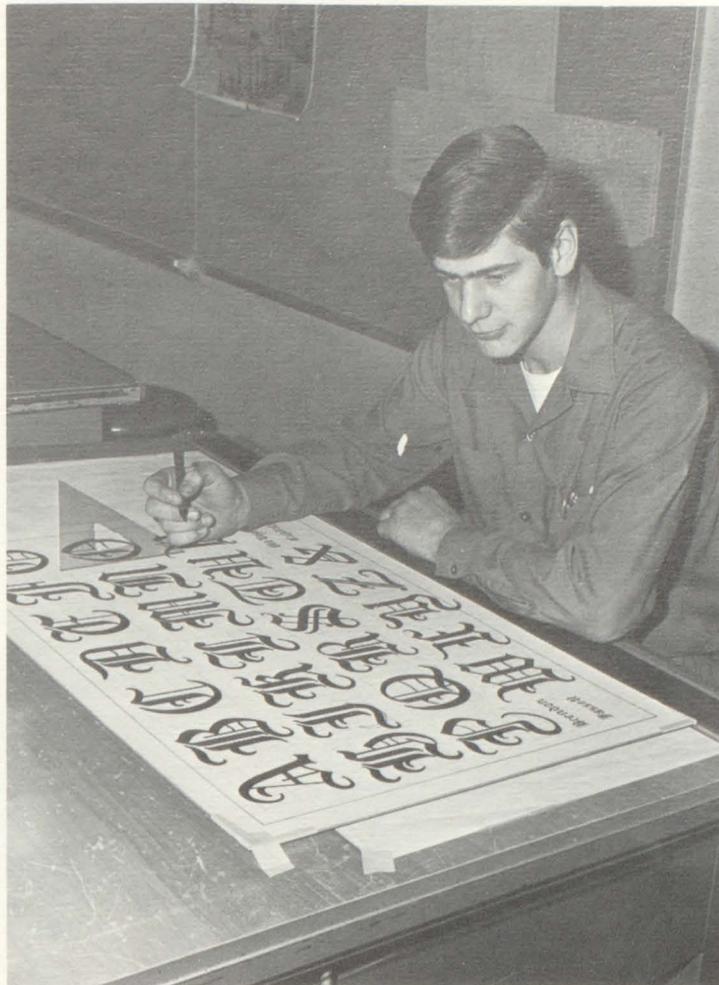

Lana Cookson

Free hand drawing plays an important role in drafting class.

Kelly Eastman, Charles Dindo, Bruce Perry.

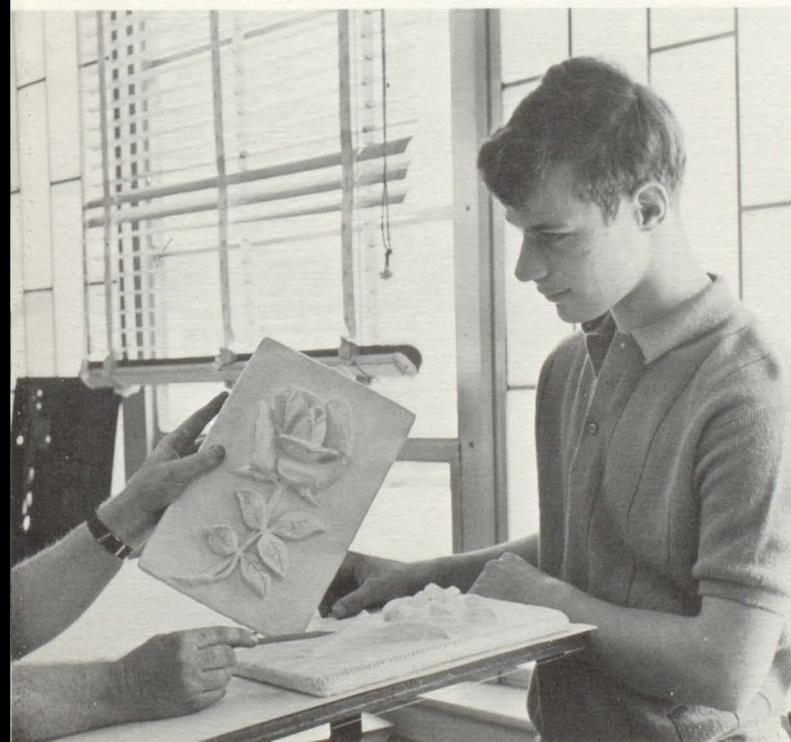

MONUMENTAL DESIGN

This course includes basic instruction leading to entry level skills in the monumental drafting and design fields.

Training in free hand drawing, perspective, scale drawing, full size drawing, mausoleums, etc.

In association with the new stone trades class students will gain experience in sandblast and knowledge of manufacturing operations.

BUILDING TRADES

The Building Trades course is comprehensive in that it provides an opportunity for the student to obtain introductory experiences in the areas of carpentry, electrical, sheet metal, plumbing, heating, and masonry.

This class will build a small house somewhere in the area each year, thus providing practical application of instruction.

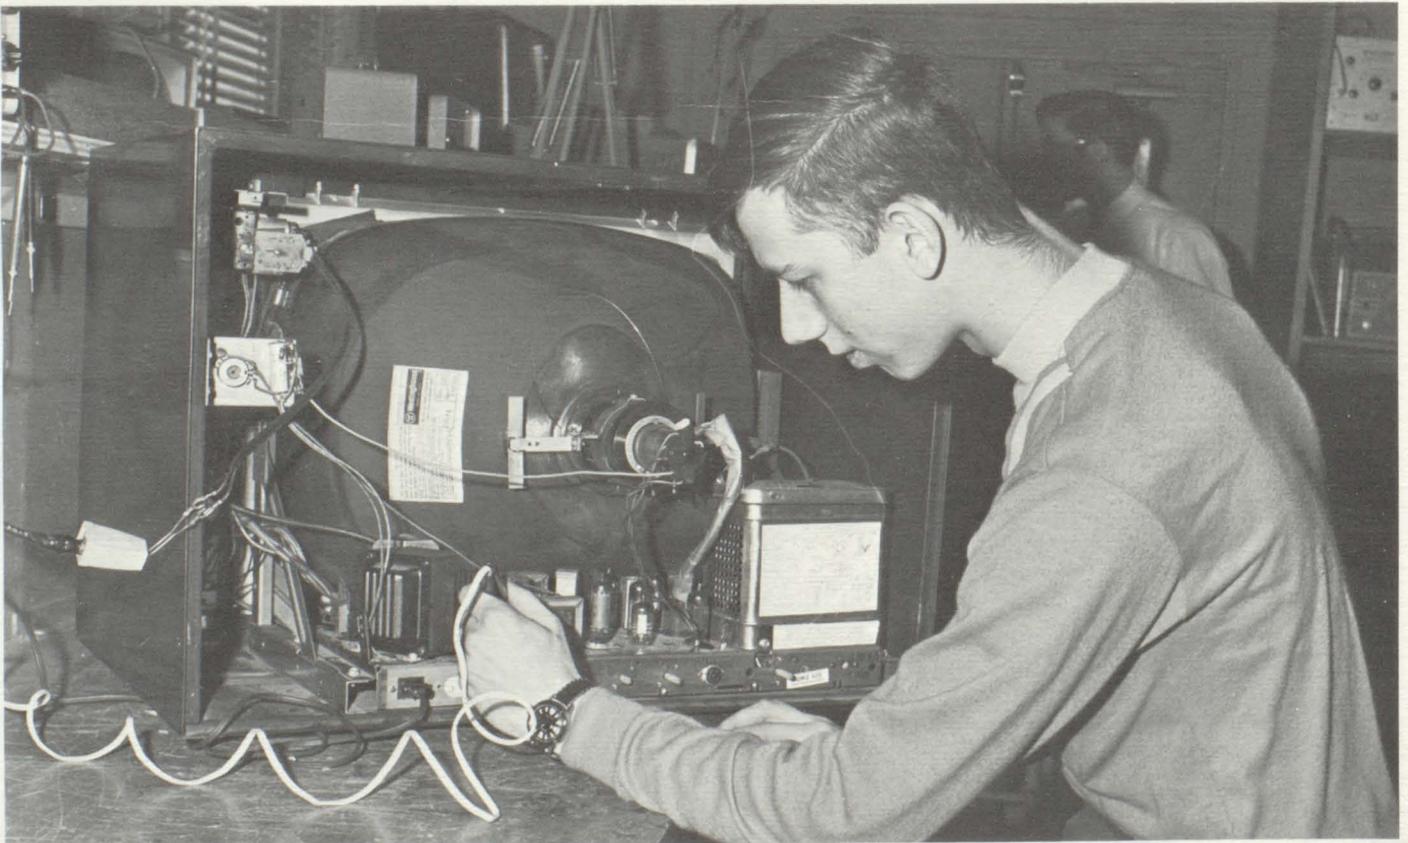

Mr. Lord demonstrates the use of power tools.

Mr. Aja supervises practical laboratory experiments and projects.

Brian Hutchins

Radio And Television

GABINO
Electronics

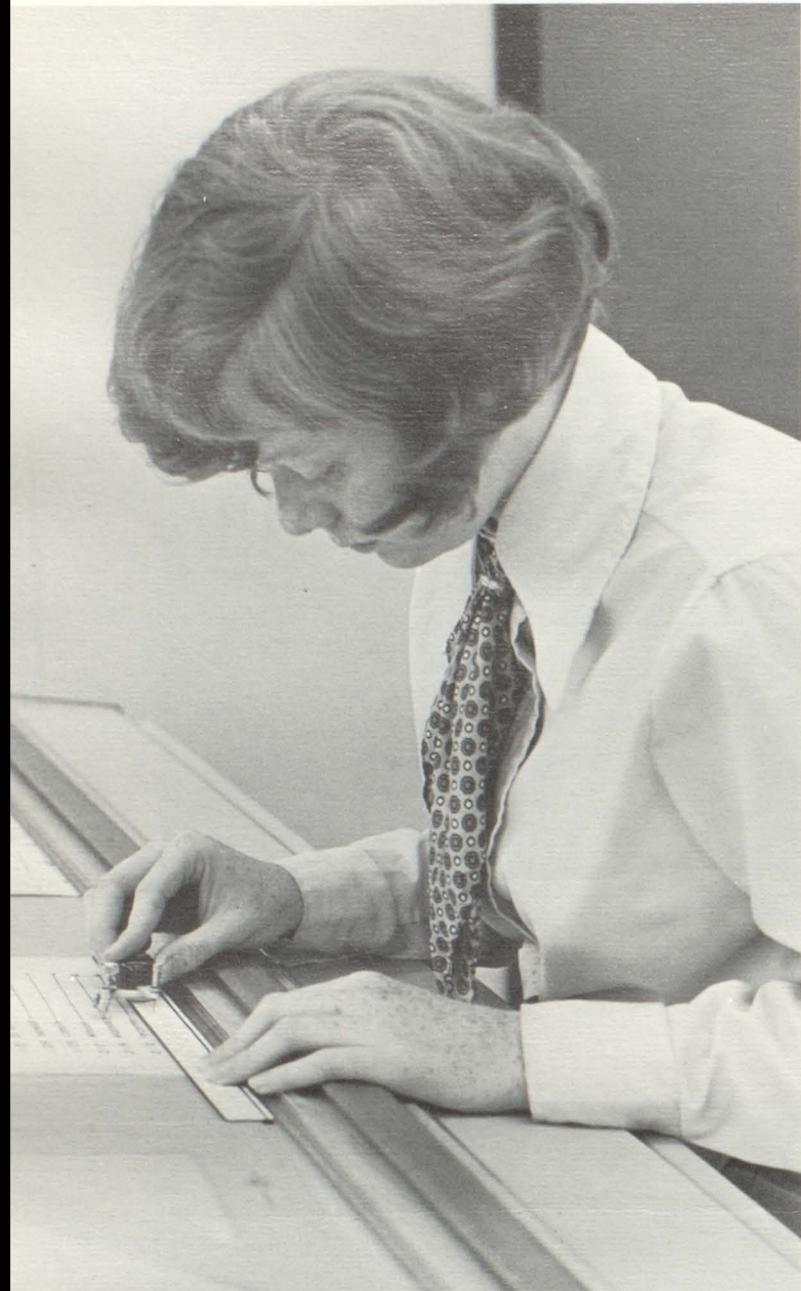

Mr. Aja adjusts a loudspeaker.

ELECTRONICS

The Electronics Radio-Television course offers training in electricity, radio (both frequency modulation and amplitude modulation), and television. Related subjects are: mathematics, science and blueprint reading.

The continuing growth of the radio and television industry insures trained personnel in the radio and TV repair field excellent employment opportunities. Increases in transmission and reception of color television and electronic control applications for radio equipment provide an expanding field for job opportunities to develop.

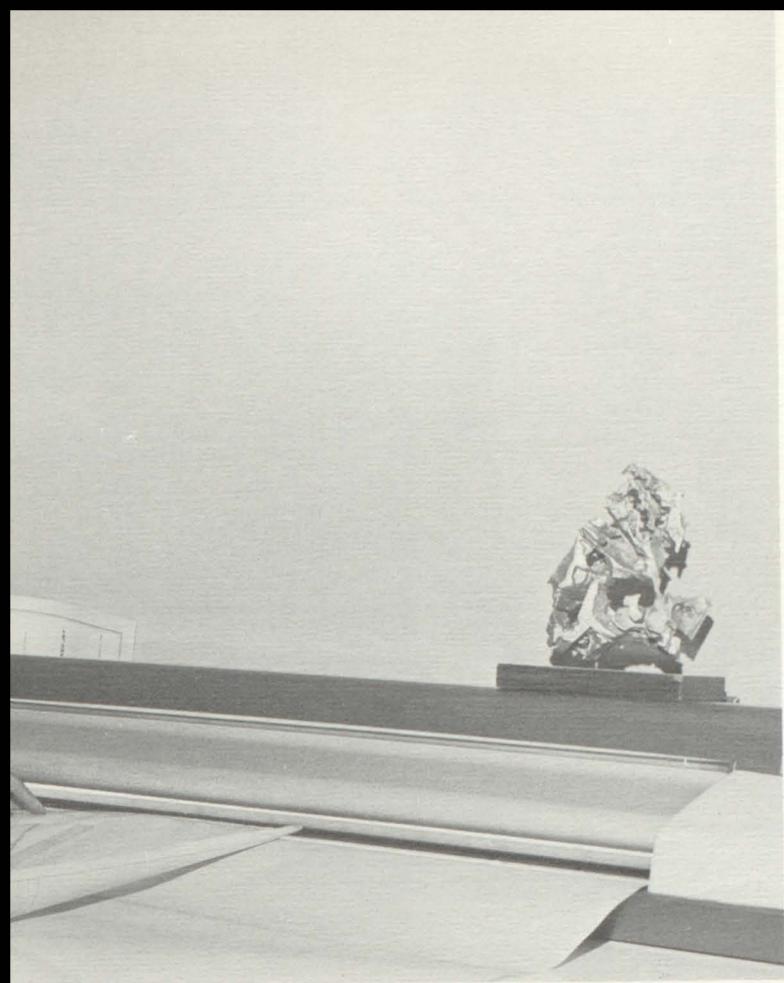

Dorothy Young learns to letter with a lettering set.

Mr. Anderson teaches the techniques of blueprinting.

GORDON ANDERSON
Technical Drafting

TECHNICAL DRAFTING

A two-year course designed primarily to fulfill the needs of the college bound student who plans to major in engineering, architecture, or design. At the same time, it will also teach a student the necessary skills and knowledge to go directly into the drafting trade. The course is divided into two sections (1) Graphic Science, taken during the students junior year and (2) Design and Architecture taken the senior year.

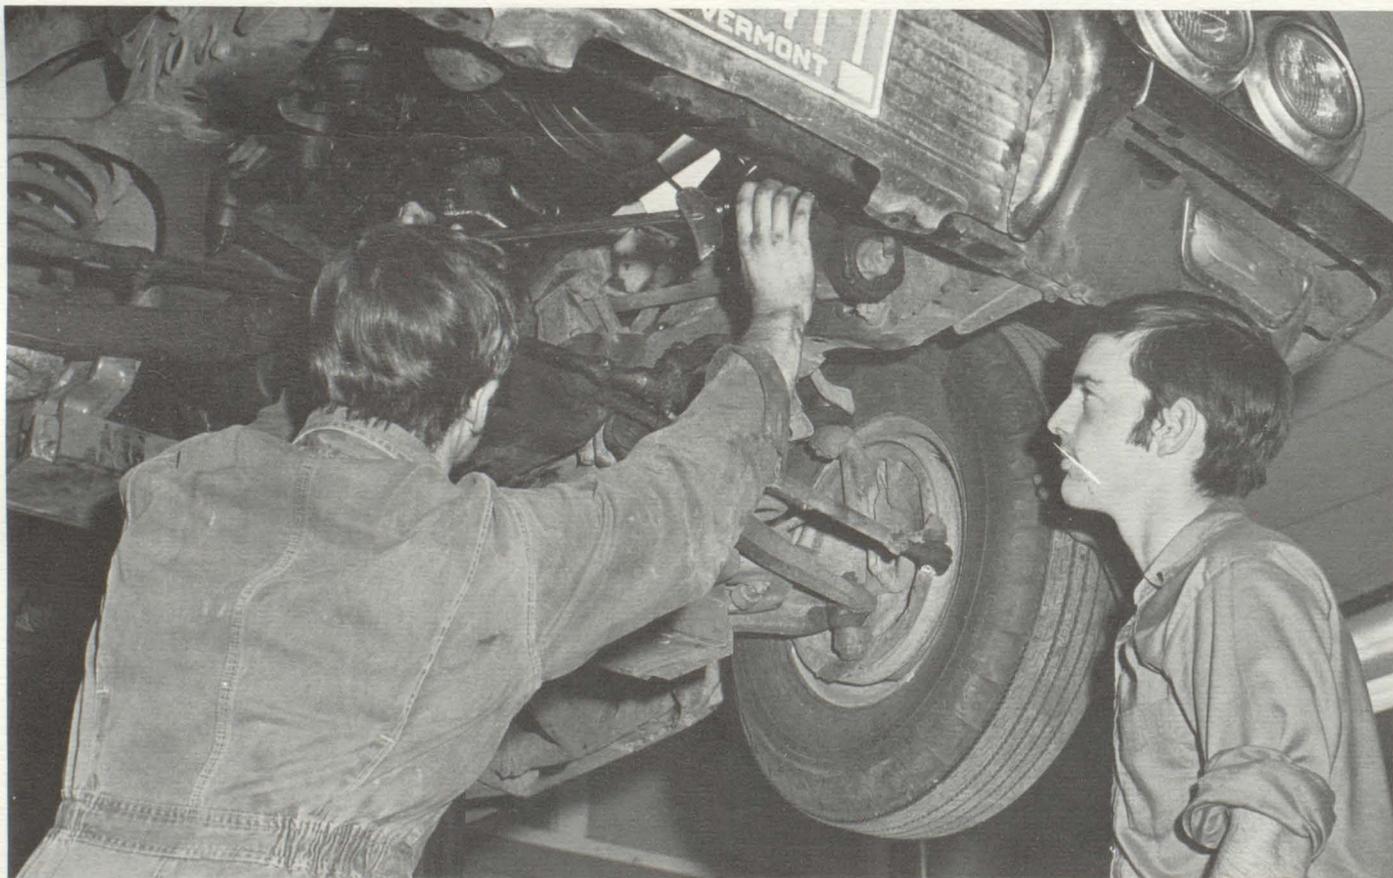

CHADBOURNE PHILBROOK
Auto Mechanics

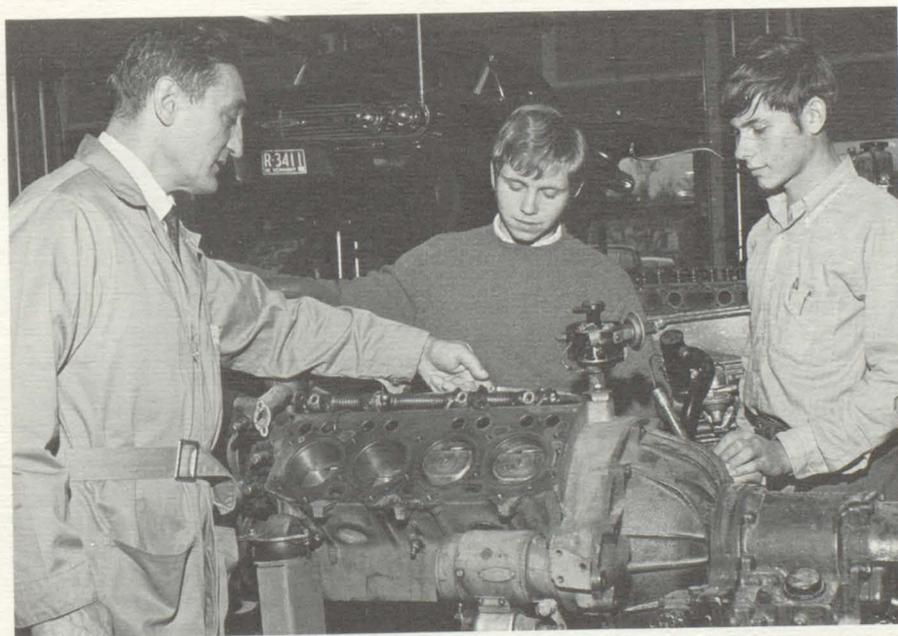

Mr. Philbrook gives instruction on the "Tell-A-Test" engine analyzer.

OLIVER ROSSI
Auto Mechanics

Mr. Rossi explains the parts of an engine.

The Automotive Mechanics Course offers technical training and experience on each sub-assembly, and shop practice in complete engine overhaul, chassis and power service, ignition and electrical system, brakes, carburation, and wheel balancing and alignment. Related subjects include welding, safety, shop math, theory and science.

Oscilloscope training

Mr. Ingersoll explains a difficult concept.

STANLEY INGERSOLL
Technical Electronics

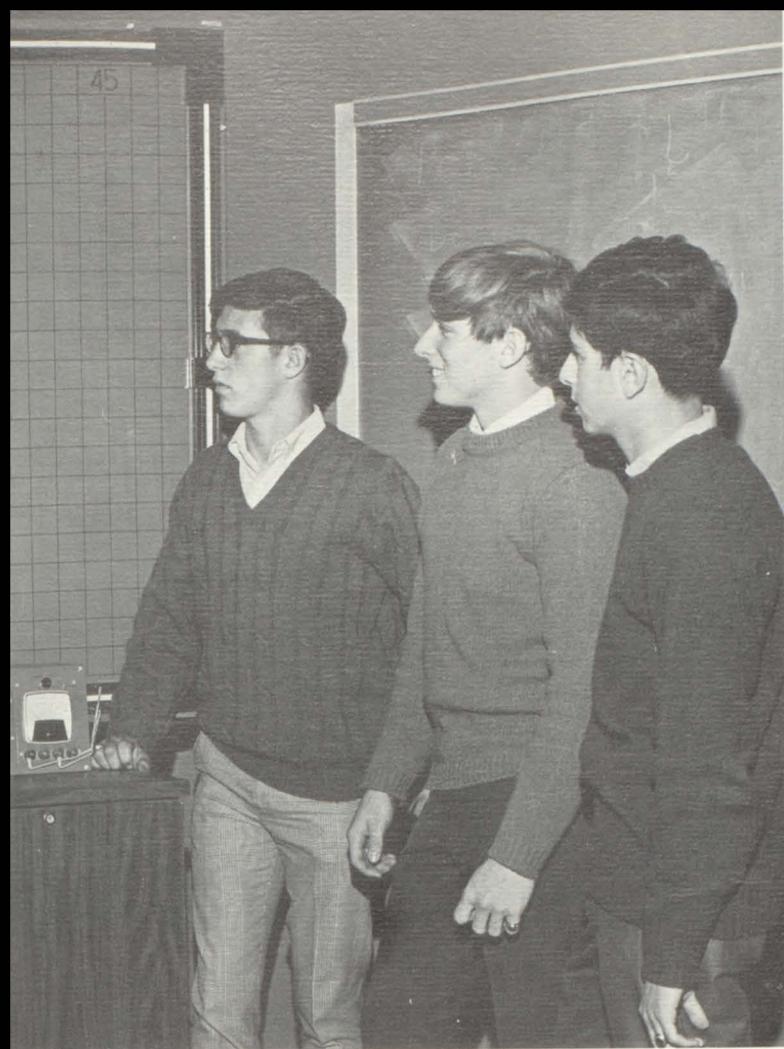

TECHNICAL ELECTRONICS

A course designed for the young man or woman who is planning to go on beyond high school in a career that involves electronics. Some of the areas that require a sound knowledge of electricity and electronics are:

- electrical, mechanical and chemical engineering metallurgy
- electrical, electronic, mechanical, and medical technology
- electronic drafting

Students taking Technical Electronics should be planning to go on to a high level apprenticeship, technical school, or college.

This course stresses fundamental knowledge and the application of mathematics and science the electronics theory that will help the students keep pace with these future courses of study. Students learn how to analyze electronic circuits mathematically and then investigate their behavior in the laboratory.

FOOD TRADES

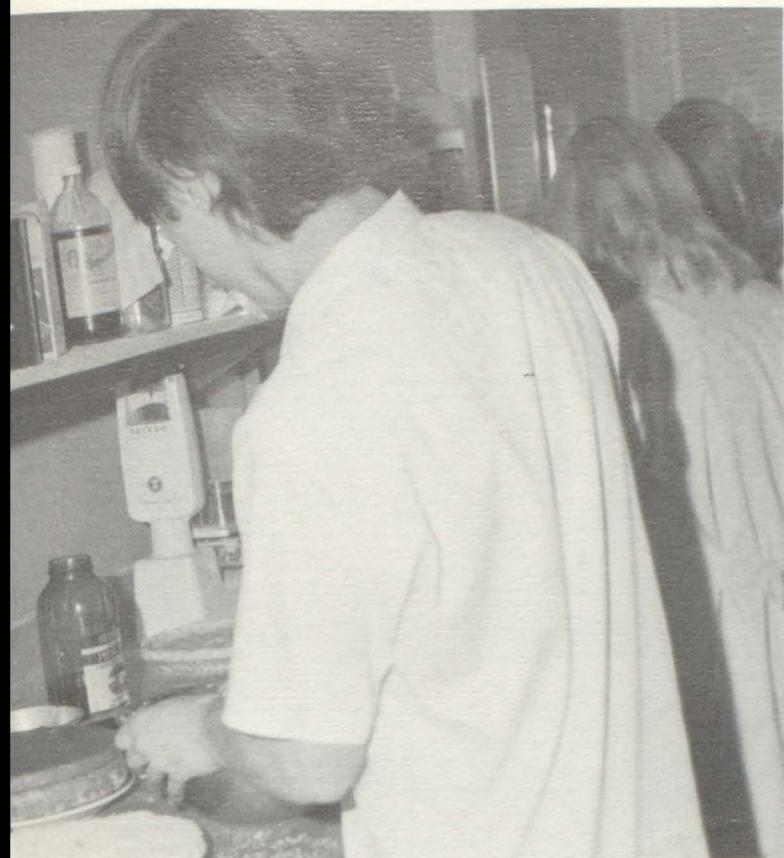

There are many jobs available to high school graduates who want to get started immediately in the food service business. The industry employs more than a million waiters and waitresses, 60,000 cooks, 350,000 food production workers and 200,000 counter fountain workers. And that doesn't include the 75,000 new openings every year.

As an individual gains experience, he can be promoted quickly to better paying jobs and may advance to supervisory or managerial positions, such as waiter-captain, hostess, dining room manager, maitre d'hotel and manager of the establishment.

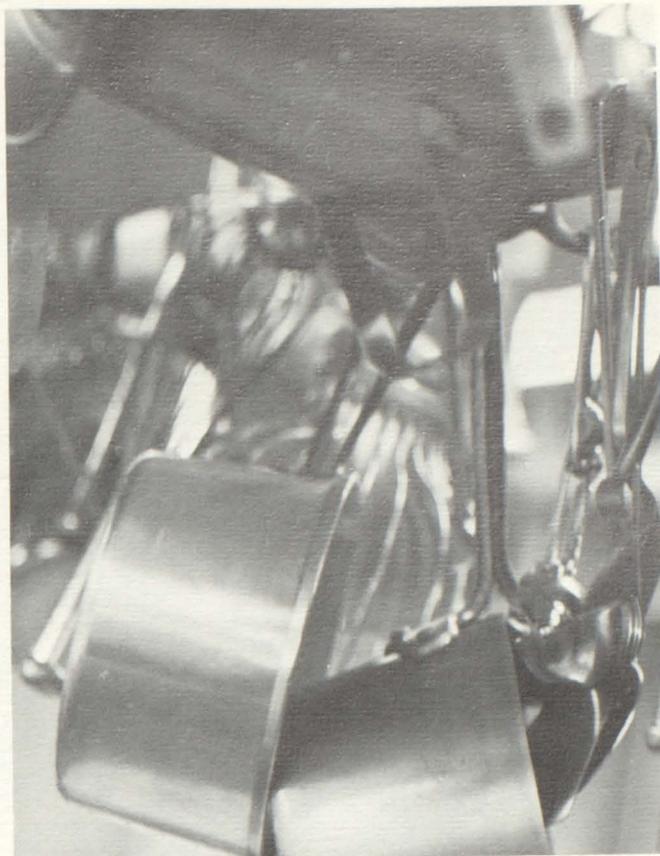

A high school graduate can enter the business directly and work his way to the top. Thousands of people have taken advantage of this aspect of the industry, not present in a number of other fields. However, the fastest way to move ahead in the food service industry is to start further up the ladder.

MARY THOMPSON
Health Occupations

HEALTH OCCUPATIONS

This course is offered to stimulate an interest in many career opportunities in the health services. It is expected that each student will develop understanding and skill in basic nursing techniques. It is intended that the learning experiences offered in this course will interest and challenge the student to seek further education and employment in the health field.

The Health Occupations class studies human anatomy as Mrs. Thompson explains.

Learning to hold an infant.

Checking blood pressure.

MRS. THOMPSON, R. N.

DIVERSIFIED OCCUPATIONS

A concept in education designed to meet the needs of a special group of students. Diversified Occupations is meant to serve the students who have not yet found interest in the conventional high school program.

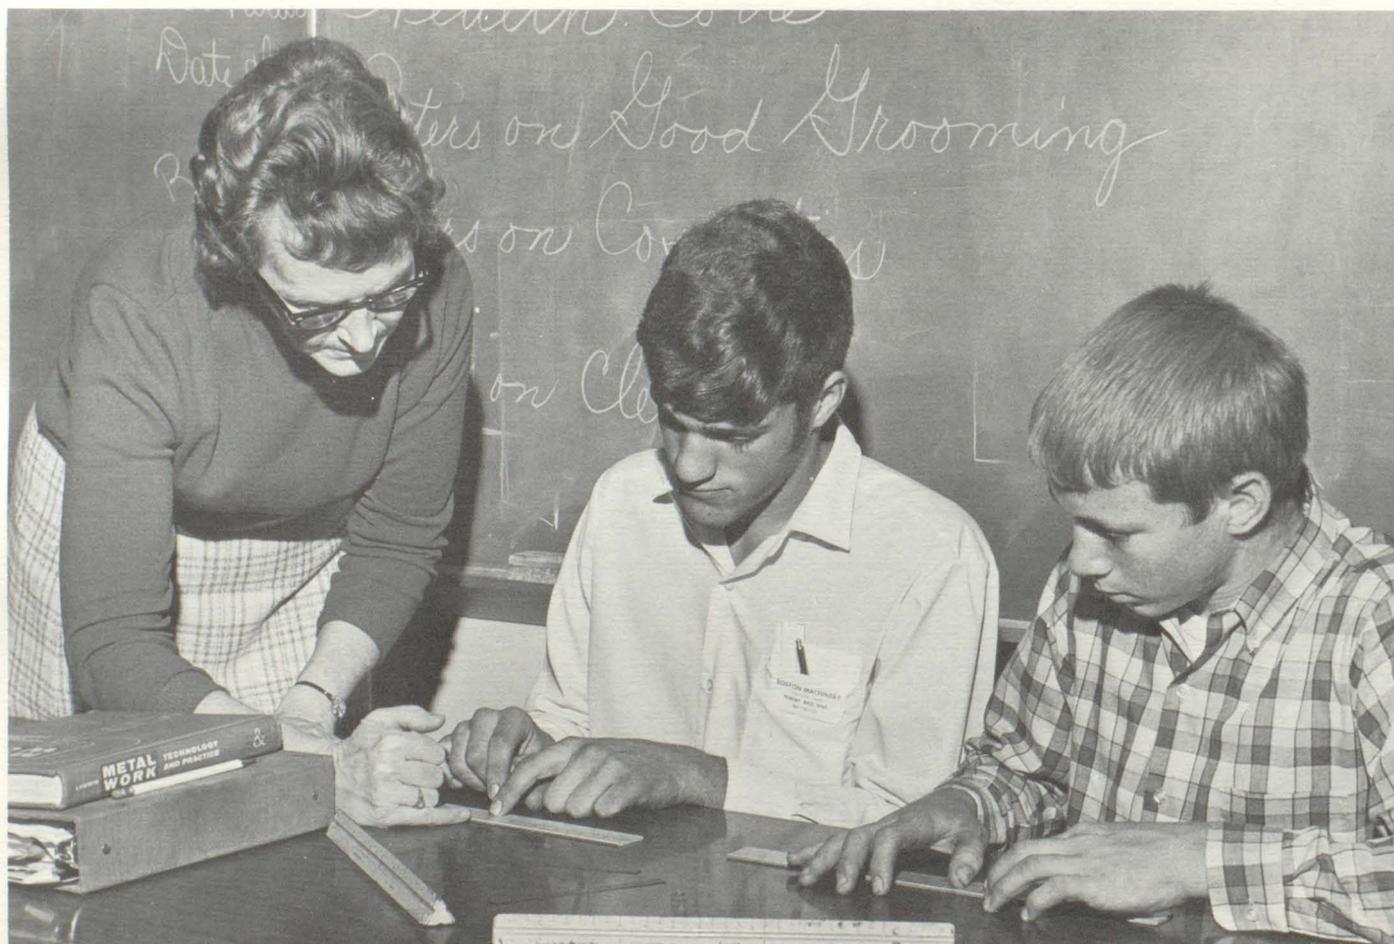

Students attend classes in the morning covering the necessary subjects for a high school diploma, U. S. History, English and Related Studies. In the afternoon the students work on a job.

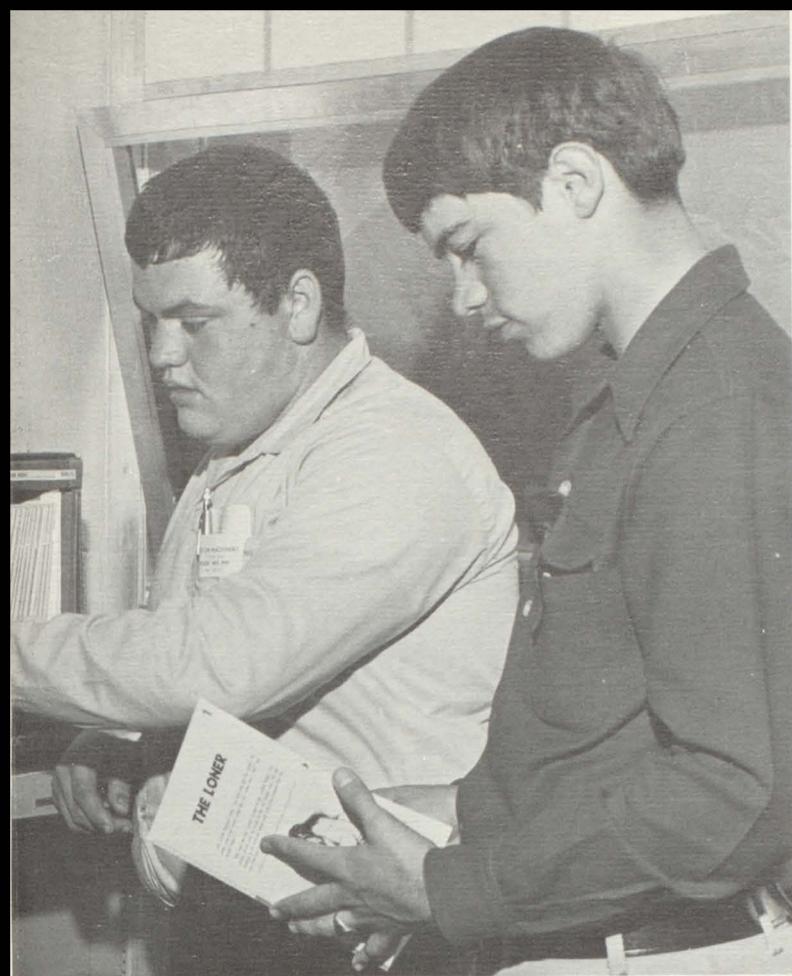

Evaluation is based on attitude, industry and improvement throught the school year.

PRICILLA ROSS
Diversified Occupations

SPECIAL EDUCATION

This course is designed to serve students who have special educational needs. The program is administered through the use of two laboratories and 2 related classrooms. The philosophy of special education is to educate the whole individual and make him a productive participating member of society.

CLASS OF 1970

My principal intention is to sound a warning. I feel that many of you will soon be trapped in a material existence. It is the easy course, but it will also sterilize your soul. I can only tell you that a much more satisfying life awaits those who are willing to look for it, in themselves, in the people around them, in nature, or in their chosen work. It requires a personal search, a painful examination of yourself, your life. Such questions can be very damaging. The answers can turn your world upside down. In the modern vernacular this final reconciliation of oneself to oneself may be termed "getting it all together" or "finding out where your head is at."

Life cannot be fully realized until these spiritual values are realized. "Seek and ye shall find." And above all, I urge you not to be dehumanized by your environment.
